'Mary Poppins' buoys audience

Magic Circle Players' show is 'supercalifragilistic - ' and ' - expialidocious'

BY PAUL WAHL

MONTROSE PRESS MANAGING EDITOR

The air was filled with magic, mystery and merriment Friday when the Magic Circle Players production of "Mary Poppins" opened at the theatre on South 12th Street.

More than 40 cast members under the direction of Tom Chamberlain brought the whimsical story of the beloved nanny to life. The stage version differs from the movie version in a number of aspects.

The basic storyline, however, is unchanged. The Banks family is falling apart due to a workaholic father and someone has to step up. The script with the additions is much better understood by those who have seen "Saving Mr. Banks," a movie that provides insights into the mind of P.L. Travers, the original author of the Mary Poppins saga.

Mitch Hamilton and Bethany Ward, who take the lead roles as Bert and Mary in the production, gave a performance that was breathtaking at times.

Ward spends nearly the entire three hours of the production onstage and has hundreds of lines of dialogue, all of which she accomplished spit spot.

Ward bears a striking resemblance to Julie Andrews, the female lead in the movie version, and sings nearly as well.

11 gallons and counting for donor

Navy veteran has given blood for 40 years

BY RICHARD REEDER
DAILY PRESS NEWS EDITOR

After 40 years of donating blood, one Montrose man recently passed a milestone not many people reach.

Avery Campbell's latest donation pushed him to 11 gallons of blood donated to Montrose Memorial Hospital.

"I was thinking about it, and that's 88 pints of blood, it's really amazing for that to happen," he said. "I started donating blood when I was in the Navy from 1964-68, then I started donating when I came back to Colorado."

Campbell is proud of his accomplishment, but says his total might be higher than the 11 gallons recorded during the regular giving sessions.

"I have been called a few times, and I have gone down and donated blood when there has been an emergency," he said. "Those donations aren't recorded with my regular visits, so my total is probably higher."

Campbell was born in Naturita and attended school in Montrose. He joined the Navy out of high school. "I have been around the world a couple times through my Navy career," he said. "I went to Barcelona and Naples and some places in the Caribbean and Gulf

Broadband Internet is on its way to Montrose

This week we offer another installment of an occasional series of questions and answer interviews with people making a difference in Montrose. John D. Malloy is parks and special projects superintendent for the City of Montrose. Virgil Turner is director of innovation and citizen engagement for Montrose.

We heard the word "broadband" a lot, what exactly is broadband and why is it important?

There are certainly many definitions of broadband, but for me it is described as high-speed Internet access, which is always on and much faster than traditional access through dial-up connections. The FCC has recently defined minimum speeds for broadband as 25 megabits per second (Mbps) download and 4 Mbps upload speeds. While some providers advertise speeds exceeding this level, we hear from many in our community of the lack of availability of this level of service.

Many people are moving to receiving their entertainment by streaming content over their Internet connection. In many households this could mean multiple streaming sessions are occurring concurrently. To stream a movie in HD you need 5 Mbps. New televisions are on the market that can display at the 4k resolution, which will require at least 25 Mbps. It will take several years before these 4k units are commonplace, but it is coming.

Businesses are limited by the same lack of available bandwidth, and this becomes a real limiting factor on how they operate. Teleconferencing is a strategy that can reduce travel expenses and provides a great competitive advantage. This requires adequate broadband to take advantage of this technology.

Why is the city involved in broadband? Isn't service already available through the private sector?

In 2012 after hearing from many constituents, the City Council adopted a goal to "increase availability and public access to high speed broadband Internet." The Council had heard from those in business as well as residents of limited availability and the challenges this caused for them. Economic development prospects were expressing concerns over our limited availability of broadband. Some businesses were saying the situation was to the point they may have to move operations to an area with adequate broadband.

When we approached our incumbent providers about increasing investment in Montrose, their response generally was they were adequately serving Montrose and there was not a sufficient return on investment to warrant increased improvements here.

Does the city have authorization from residents to pursue this initiative?

Yes, in April 2012 voters approved an exemption of SB-152 (a state law prohibiting municipalities any type of involvement for the provision of broadband services). At this time a charter provision was also approved authorizing the City to provide

How far along are we in the broadband process?
A critical issue in our path to make a difference in assuring affordable and accessible broadband to Montrose has been to disrupt the wholesale market in our region. A large component of the commodity price for Internet is "transport fees." These are fees which are paid to the owners of the infrastructure, which connects Montrose to points of presence for the Internet (Denver and Albuquerque for example).

Working with owners of these networks, the Region 10 Broadband Project has a plan to enter into long-term leases with fiber owners and then to transport the Internet over these lines, eliminating the transport fees.
This will bring down the wholesale cost from $30 to $50 per megabit per month to under $3 per megabit per month. This radically disrupts the market and will benefit all users in both public and private sectors. It levels the playing field between the large urban area and rural Montrose and Delta counties. We are just beginning our implementation of this project and expect completion of Phase I in the next two years.

With the wholesale pricing dilemma resolved, our next focus is to develop a strategic plan to bring abundant and affordable broadband to our residents and businesses in Montrose. The City Council on Nov. 3 approved entering into an agreement with NeoFiber to help us prepare this strategic plan and financial model to achieve this goal.

Montrose is looking to spend $300,000 on broadband next year, what exactly is that money going to buy?

The $300,000 in the proposed 2016 budget is to begin building a municipal fiber-optic network connecting up to 31 community anchor institutions (CAI) in Montrose. These CAIs are public and nonprofit facilities providing core public benefits to the community. This project will continue into 2017 with an expected cost of $450,000. The city funding is being matched by the State of Colorado Department of Local Affairs with $750,000 in grant money.

What is the nature of the city's relationship with Region 10 when it comes to broadband?

We are one of the Region 10 local governments committed to working together to solve the lack of available and affordable Internet for our region. The city of Montrose has a staff representative on the steering committee, which is guiding this effort. We are very pleased with the collaboration.

We've also heard the phrase "Next Century Cities." Can you tell us more about that? Also "Gigabit City?"

The city of Montrose has been recognized nationally as a community focused on finding solutions to inadequate Internet service. A national nonprofit called Next Century Cities was formed in late 2014, and Montrose was invited to become one of 31 inaugural members, among the likes of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Lafayette, La.; and Santa Monica, Calif. The organization provides support and collaboration for communities like Montrose in addressing this issue. Next Century Cities has grown to more than 100 cities at this point and was recognized by President Obama in a speech this spring regarding a need for improvements to broadband in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Gigabit City is a term that describes a goal of making 1 Gbps commonly available in a community. This is an objective of ours, and we recently have deployed this level of service to city buildings and the Proximity Space on Main Street. In preparing our strategic plan, we will strive to develop a plan to make this level of service available to our community on a large scale and at an affordable cost.

Why is this initiative important to someone who is elderly or retired, perhaps doesn't own a computer or uses Internet only to surf the web?

This effort will have widespread economic benefits for our community. Cities, as mentioned above, that have gone before us have realized these benefits, which certainly have spilled over to the entire community. I ask those who perhaps do not see a personal need for improvements that will come from this initiative if they would be interested in building a Montrose in which their children and grandchildren are able to live and prosper. For me, failing to solve this issue as a community, is not an option.

How would this initiative benefit the education system in Montrose?

Access to broadband for students in becoming a necessity, if it not already. In many school districts across the country we are seeing the instruction model flipped to where students watch lectures online at home and complete their "homework" at school where they receive assistance from their teacher.

Curriculum and reference materials are shifting to digital formats. Testing occurs online in many cases. Without access to broadband in the home, students are at a real disadvantage. This is one of the big drivers for Montrose in ensuring we are prepared for this shift. We feel ubiquitous and affordable access is a requirement in our initiative.

Virgil Turner is director of innovation and citizen engagement for Montrose. He has served the City of Montrose and its residents for 27 years, having been appointed as the administrative services director in 2005 and serving as the director of innovation and citizen engagement for the past two years.
